What's the difference?

Scholarships:

Scholarships provide support for undergraduate or graduate education. Certain scholarships are also renewable, which means students can reapply the following year. Lastly, scholarships may also include internship opportunities or other educational benefits.

Internships:

An internship is a general term for a work-based experience while a student is studying at university. Internships may be paid or unpaid. Whether paid or unpaid, students gain real world experience, ideally in their field of study.

Fellowships:

Fellowships are merit-based scholarships for the purpose of furthering education. Some come with an internship or post-graduate work requirement, such as a research component. Fellowships are usually awarded to students pursuing graduate or doctoral degrees.

Requesting a letter of recommendation?

Also, ask faculty who relate closely to your field of study. For example, if you are applying for a STEM scholarship, request a letter from a STEM professor who is familiar with your work.
